MHS Career Day Features Job Shadowing Opportunities

By Madi Wojtowicz

On May 18, numerous professionals spent the day at Maumee High School where they participated in the second annual Career Day. More than 40 professionals from a wide variety of fields — such as broadcast journalists, business owners, a neurosurgeon and pediatrician, a veterinarian, firefighters, FBI agents, and many more — presented about their careers to freshman and sophomore students. After getting the chance to hear nine different speakers throughout the day, the students' eyes were opened to the abundance of possible career choices.

In addition to professionals meeting with freshman and sophomores at Maumee High School on May 18, juniors had the opportunity to complete a job shadowing experience. More than 100 students spent the day out in the community.

"Juniors who took the opportunity to shadow came away excited about the possibilities and some had experiences that triggered new and different interests," explains school counselor Justin Fults. "One of the goals of the experience was exposure and we certainly accomplished this and also helped students establish relationships with career professionals." Overall, Maumee High School's Career Day provided students with a great opportunity to begin evaluating their futures, thanks to the advice and experience of many professionals who donated their time to support Maumee High School students.
